#14 Faith & the Last Chapter

When the last page is turned in your book of life and your probation has been completed, its to late for a rewrite. It's finished. My earthly father is near there, with me close behind working on my last chapter.

It's a little to late for my father to make any additions to his book, but I might be able to ad some clarifications at the end of my book.

To me there still seems to be questions out there as to whether or not there is a real God and is there really a purpose to humanity other than the animal classification, that of supporting while procreating the specie. To me it seems while many hold in their hearts to the feeling of a God, and choose to rely on him, few if any really live his precepts as given in almost all scripture.

It is said you can determine the degree of faith in God a person has by studying where they devote their time on earth. Today it seems while we half-heartedly claim to believe, we attend our churches, we carry those scriptures but when you really get to the bottom of things it's the money. Is money more of a God to us? As a parent passes, its what material things are left for the family to fight over. Its, even though I missed church this week, I can't afford to be late to work, I'll get fired or at least a dock in pay.

That brings us to Faith, Faith in a Creator, our Father in Heaven. Religion, a belief in a supreme being, even with the massive variations in religions today, they all sprang from only one source. So it would appear that no matter your religious beliefs we all go back to one being. There is a Father in Heaven of all humanity or there is not, there really is no in between, but most seem to be there according to their works.

It appears it you do believe in a God, there are evidences of his guide which has been left to help us to return to his presents which has been given to mankind from the beginning of time and should be available today. Most important, with or without the wicked attempts to destroy Gods word or to transfigure it in one way or another, we are told that all humankind has been born with the ability, whether religious or not, to know good from evil. This being the case we have no one to blame for our evil or sinful choices but ourselves. So while it makes us feel good, it's really not necessary to dress up and attend a religious gathering on the Sabbath to know right from wrong.

And if Jesus was for real, his message was not for your money you will be blessed, but "for the works which ye have seen me do that shall ye also do; for that which ye have seen me do even that shall ye do."

Look inside and around you, who do you see who are really doing as he has done? If you look carefully at religions of the world and the teachers there in, rather than seeing men duplicating what Jesus has done, they seem to be a mockery of Jesus. Did you see them pass the hat for Jesus so he could pay for his fine buildings and for his sustenance?

Did he head up a massive church building program throughout the world? Yet what he did has had more influence in the world than any other man who has lived. Are those doing this then doing as he has done?

Are you personally doing as Christ has done. How much did Lazarus's mother get billed for raising Lazarus from the dead? What a financial windfall the medical profession would have if they could master this deed. Could this be an example of what he had done, and are we today following suit. Another example might be, after the more wicked had been destroyed, this would have included all the more righteous, according to themselves at the great righteous capitol city of Zarahemla, as it was burned, and Jesus appeared, not in the righteous temple in Bountiful, which also had been destroyed, but out side in the open to meet with those he considered the more righteous. Another in our day, when Jesus comes in the first part of the Millennium, which is now, does he come to the righteous center of the Mormons in the Salt Lake Valley to peruse his worldwide financial empire at the church office building? No, for some reason, he bypasses this location to meet at the New Jerusalem. Why not the Holy of Holies in Salt Lake City?

In the days of the Gentiles Christ tells us in the Book of Mormon that he will be unable to be with us, that in place of him, he will send an abundance of his Holy Ghost. And in addition he provides us a complete and pure guide, in the Book of Mormon, that if we live the precepts of his church the he has given, we can stand approved and sanctified at judgment day. It's simple, what more is needed than that?

He teaches in the Book of Mormon that nothing should be taken away and nothing added, and that we are cursed if we place our trust in men of flesh? Is placing your trust in the Prophet, a form of placing trust in men of flesh? Is it possible to cause God to be upset, if we divide our trust or faith in him with men of flesh? These are questions that arise from reading, praying and pondering God's words given us in the book of his Holy Word, the Book of Mormon. I am searching for the answers and truth so I can finish my last chapter in my book of life. Appreciate any help...
